I have only just started and the first lesson I've learnt has been rather stressing. The first thing I was a little bit puzzled is that I always heard that if you drive a car the wheel should be in the center when your driving and not off to one side. But there are not any indications to do this in the manual. So I was wondering where I have to do this and whether I have to do it for all gears or just for the first gear. A: If you look at the illustrations on page 2 of this PDF: There is also a checklist at the bottom of the same page where they tell you whether to engage the clutch to put it in neutral. In short, you need to engage the clutch to put it in neutral for all gears. When you start the engine, it is in Neutral. When you shift into gear, you must disengage the clutch to put it in neutral. You may be able to get away with letting the car shift into gear without disengaging the clutch if you know your car, but it is not safe to go into a gear without first disengaging the clutch. It is very important to understand that when you let the clutch pedal out of the brake and put the car in gear, the engine will still be running. This is usually not what you want. If you disengage the clutch to put the car in neutral, then you should not be surprised to see the clutch pedal come back in when you let it out again. When you let it out to put the car in gear, the engine should not be running. Epithelium.JPG Scientists from
